DISTILLERY FIRE.

Fourteen Employes Believed to Have Perished in the Fiames.

Peorla, Ill., June 6.-It is now known that at least 14 men perished in the fire and explosion at Corning's distillery. Eight bodies were recovered from the ruins, four of which are identified. Those identified are: George Gebhardt, Peter Lettemeyer, Thomas E. Montgomery Samuel Parsons, The list of unidentified dead and missing is as follows: Ernest Brown, Milton Crowl, William Finley, Jr., John Hobaker, Frank Knoll, Louis Sax, Alec Powell, John Unsbee, J. Zimmerman. The fire destroyed every building of the big plant except the distillery proper. The explosion which caused the fire was caused by running spirits, nunicating the fire to the entire cattle in the sheds and 30,000 barrels of high-proof spirits. The loss is esti-

Taught Him a Lesson

Back in the seventies, when Dewey had command of a ship of the old Hartford type, he was lying in the harbor off Genoa. Visitors were allowed on board at all times, except Sunday morning, when inspection took place. One Sunday a well known American millionaire steamed out with a party of friends in his private yacht and succeeded in getting on deck, where he was met by Captain Dewey, who asked him to leave. Mr. Money remonstrated, and finally, exasperated by the cool firmness of the officer, he burst out: 'No, sir; I won't leave. I am an American citizen and have a perfect right on this vessel. I pay taxes in America. I am on my own property. Part of this ship belongs to me!" Dewey opened his penknife, stooped down and split off a piece of the deck flooring. Handing it to the incensed American citizen, he replied: "There's bout what you own, and there's the ladder. Now git!" And he got.

They seemed to be framing the semance of an old ballad that Meredith knew. The whisper grew more distinct. It became a rich but broken voice, and they heard it singing like the sound of some far, halting minstrelsy:

Wave willows murmur waters—golden sunbeams smile,

Meredith gave an exclamation.

The bandaged hand waved jauntily over the Teller's head. "Ah, men," he said, almost clearly, and tried to lift grand eleven we have this year! There will be little left of anything that stands against them. It's our championship. Did you see Jim Romley ride over his man this afternoon?" As the voice grew clearer the sheriff stepped forward, but Tom Meredith, with a loud cry of grief, threw himself on his knees beside the cot and

Two pairs of carriage lamps sparkled in front of the hospital in the earliest of the small hours, these subjoined to two deep hooded phaetons, from each of which quickly descended a gentleman with a beard, an air of eminence and a small, omeous black box, and the air of eminence was justified by the haste with which Meredith had sent for them and by their wide reoute. But that's a bad community over there. They are everlastingly worrying our people. They've always been a bother to us, and it's time it was stopped for good. I don't believe very much in punishment, but you can't do a great deal of reforming with the Crossroaders unless you catch them young, before they're weaned. They wean them on whisky, you know. I realize you needn't have sworn me for me to tell you this."

Horner and Smith had started at the mention of the Crossroads, but they subdued their ejaculations, while Mr. Barrett looked as if he had known it, of course. The room was still, save for the dim voice and the soft transcribings of the stylographic pen.

"I left Judge Briscoe's and went west on the pike to a big tree. It rained, and I stepped under the tree for shelwas carrying his gown and hood-1 saw two others a little farther east they had followed me from the Briscoes' or near there. He understood lynching, now the thing was home to him, and his feeling was no inspiration of a fear lest the law miscarry. It was the itch to get his own hand on the rope. Horner came out presently and whis pered a long, broad, profound curse upon the men of the Crossroads, and redith's gratitude to him was keen. Barrett went away soon after, and desire to kick Barrett, possibly for his sergeant's sake. Warren Smith sat in ward with the nurse and Gay, and the room was very quiet. It was a long vigil. They were only waiting.

At 5 o'clock he was still alive-just hat, Smith came out to say. Meredith sent a telegram to Helen which would give Plattville the news that Harkles was found and was not yet gone from them. Horner left for the station to catch a train. There were things for him to do in Carlow. At noon Meredith sent a second telegram to Helen as barren of detail as the first. He was alive; was a little improved. But this telegram did not reach her, for she was on he way to Rouen, and half of the population of Carlow-at least so it seem to the unhappy conductor of the accommodation-was with her.

They seemed to feel that they could camp in the hospital halls and corridors, and they were an incalculable worry to the authorities. More came on every train, and nearly all brought flowers and jelly and chickens for pre-

CHAPTER XL

R. ROSS SCHOFIELD was engaged in decorating the bat-tered chairs in the Herald editorial room with blue satin Dry Goods Emporium had been directed by a sudden inspiration of his superior, Mr. Parker of the composing force. It was Ross' intention to garnish each chair with an elaborately tied bow, but as he was no sallor and understood only the intricacies of a hard knot he confined himself to that species of ornamentation, leaving, however, very long ends of ribbon hanging down after the manner of the pendants of rosettes. Mr. Schofield was alone at his labor, his two confreres having betaken themselves to the station to meet the train from Rouen.

It was a wet, gray day. The wide country lay dripping under formless wraps of thin mist, and the warm, drizling rain blackened the weather beaten shingles of the station, made clear worn planks of the platform and damp ened the packing cases too thoroughly for occupation by the station lounge The bus driver, Mr. Bennett, and the proprietors of two attendant "cut uners" and three or four other worthies whom business or the lack of it called to that locality availed themselves of the shelter of the waiting room, but the gentlemen of the Herald were too agitated to be confined save by the limits

They had reached the station half an hour before train time and consumed the interval in pacing the platform under a big cotton umbrella, addressing each other only in monosyllables. Those in the waiting room gossiped eagerly and for the thousandth time about the late events and particularly about the tremendous news of Fisbee, Judd Bennett looked out through the rainy doorway at the latter with reverence and a fine pride of townsmanship. He declared it to be his belief that Fisbee and Parker were waiting for her now.

For all Carlow knew why Fishee had gone to meet the strange lady at the station when she had come to visit the Briscoes, why he had come with her to the lecture, why he had taken supper at the Briscoes' three times and dinner twice when she was there. Fisbee had told the story to Parker on a melancholy afternoon as they sat together in the Herald office, and Parker had told the town. It was simple enough indeed, and Fisbee's past was a mystery no longer. It might have been revealed years before had there been anything in particular to reveal to talk of himself and his affair Things had a habit of not occurring t

Ross looked out of the window and aughed as he took her hand, which he shook with a long up and down motion, out he was set at better ease by her apparent unconsciousness of the fact that the decorations were for her. 'Oh it ain't much. I reckon," he replied, and continued to look out of the win

She went to the desk and removed her gloves and laid her rain cloak over a chair near by. "Yes. They're gray." Kedge Halloway's lecture. But say Cale, they're kird of changeable. When she come in upstairs with you and Fisbee they were jest as blue near matched the color of our ribbons."

When the editorial chamber had been made so neat that it almost glowed, though it could never be expected to shine as did Fisbee and Caleb Parker and Ross Schofield that morning, the lady took her seat at the desk and looked over the few items the gentlemen had already compiled for her perusal. Mr. Parker explained many technicalities peculiar to the Carlow Herald, translated some phrases of the printing room and enabled her to grasp the amount of matter needed to fill an Tying a Horse to a Hole. It has been discovered that the desrt Indians, who have never been acredited with superabundant wits, have for many years employed a method of ground that is clever, unique and effective. The operation of tying a horse impossible one, for there is something decidedly intangible and unsubstantial about the hole. The operation is perhot sands, the Indians dig with their hands until they have made a hole about two feet deep. They then tie an immense knot in the end of the halter ope, lower it into the bottom of the ole, fill the hole with sand and then jump and stamp upon it until the earth over the knot is about as hard as sandstone.-London Magazine.
